Want a Sane Fourth.

Some of our exchanges from neighboring cities are making quite an effort to have the Fourth of July celebrated in their city in a sane manner. That is, to do away with the use of guns, pistols, fire crackers and other kinds of noise-producers that contain dangerous explosives. The annual harvest of death in this country from the observance of the Fourth of July is commencing to attract the attention of many people throughout the country.

BIRTHS.

A son to Mr. and Mrs. John Young on Saturday.

A daughter to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pasano.

Wisconsin State Civil Service.

The State Civil Service Commission reports that during the last three years it has held on an average three examinations a year for the position of stenographer. From thirty to fifty candidates usually make the eligible list at each examination, and nearly every candidate who passes has a chance during the term of eligibility to accept a position. There are about twenty-five stenographic positions in the legislature open to men only at salaries averaging about $150 a month during the legislative session. The more competent stenographers in the legislature invariably get advancement as a result of their legislative experience.

There is no other eligible list so quickly exhausted as that of stenographer. The reason obviously is that there is a present urgent demand both in the state service and in the business world especially for women who have sufficient education to fit them for secretarial work.

The next examination for stenographer, including stenographers for the legislative session of 1911, will be held on the 25th of June. Salaries for women range from $10 to $100 per month. There are frequent calls for stenographers at salaries ranging from $15 to $100.

The state service covers a wide range and, to supply the necessary information to persons who are interested in the work, the commission has issued a pamphlet of information which describes the various clerical, stenographic, technical and manual positions in the state service. This may be procured by writing to the State Civil Service Commission at Madison, Wis.

The work of the Commission has grown steadily during the last four or five years, and at the present time from seventy-five to one hundred temporary and permanent positions are being filled each month by competitive examinations.

Fire at Mosinee.

Reports of a disastrous fire come from Mosinee this morning, it being stated that the flames wiped out six residences, the postoffice, one store, two saloons, a barber shop and drug store. The fire occurred early this morning.

Was a Warm Blaze.

The boiler house next to the Green Bay & Western roundhouse caught fire on Monday afternoon, and notwithstanding the fact that the fire company responded at once and had two streams of water on the flames in a very short time, the building was practically destroyed.

It comes in all the hardwoods, such as Oak, Walnut, Cherry, Mahogany, Rosewood, Satinwood, etc., and will withstand hot and cold water and soap.

FOR SALE ONLY BY

It will boil it in water for you or pound it with a hammer, and will guarantee that what we sell you will stand the same test.

There was a quantity of oil and coal in the building and this probably made it much harder to extinguish than it otherwise would have been.

The roundhouse was also afire at one time, but was put out with only nominal damage. The railway employees were unable to account for the origin of the fire.

IS MEETING WITH GENERAL FAVOR.

The proposed plan to change the name of Grand Rapids to something less confusing is meeting with pretty general favor among business men who have in the past been annoyed by having mail and express matter go to Michigan. Instead of counting heads, of course there has been some objection to the plan among the older residents, but this was expected. However, there are not many who seem to favor Grand Rapids, most of our citizens seeming to think that the new name should be more suggestive. Just plain "Rapids" has been suggested, and has the distinction of being brief and suggestive. Wisconsin Rapids and Central Rapids are also two of the names that have been spoken of, and they have the same advantages as mentioned above.

At a recent meeting of some of the ladies in this city the matter of changing the name of the town came up and the ladies decided that we ought to have an Indian name, and with this end in view the name Adawagun was put forth. This is Indian for Grand Rapids and is certainly decidedly distinctive. It might seem trifling at first, but after we had got used to it and learned how to spell it, there is no reason why it should seem worse than Oshkosh or Kalamazoo or Neenah, or any of the many other Indian names that are used for this purpose.

The average man in town who wants the name of the city changed is not caring such an awful lot what the new name is, just so it is something that will save mistakes in the future.

A NEW STYLE IN THE PANHANDLE

A CHAPTER FROM THE MEMOIRS OF CAPTAIN "BILL" McDONALD, OF TEXAS

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUBLISHING CO.

BY ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE

CAPTAIN BILL boarded a train one day in Fort Worth just as it was pulling out of the station. He noticed two disreputable-looking characters crowding against a well-dressed old gentleman and an instant later heard the latter exclaim:

"I have been robbed!" At the same moment the two toughs started to leap from the car steps. Capt. Bill seized one of the men and called to the other to halt. The man detained made an attempt to strike his captor, who promptly bent his gun over his head—mildly at first, then with force, bringing the offender to his knees. The Ranger captain now pulled the bell cord, brought the train to a standstill, turned his prisoner over to a policeman who had appeared on the scene, and set out in pursuit of the other thief, who by this time had obtained a healthy start.

Capt. Bill is built like a greyhound, with long hind legs and a prow designed for splitting the wind. The thief was active, and making good time, but he was no match for a Ranger of that architecture. The distance between them closed up rapidly, and presently the fugitive, having reached what is known as "Niggertown," dived into one of the houses, causing a regular stampede among the inhabitants. Men, women, and a rabble of little pickaninnies fell out in every direction. Capt. Bill, now close behind, added to the excitement as he plunged in, only to find the room vacant. A quick, however, hung across a second doorway, and stepping over to it, he his six-shooter ready for emergency, he drew the hanging quickly aside. As he did so, he was confronted by a man standing on a chair, holding in his hand a bottle filled with some transparent liquid, which he was in the act of throwing. The crack of McDonald's revolver was followed by such a sudden collapse of the would-be vitrol thrower, that the Ranger captain thought he had wounded him seriously, though his intention had been merely to disable the arm in action. Investigation showed, however, that the thief was only frightened; that the ball had grazed his arm, also his ear, cutting a hole through the rim of his hat.

Securing the vitrol as evidence, Capt. Bill marched his man back to where he had left thief Number One, only to find that the inexperienced policeman had allowed him to escape. He did not trust him with his second capture, but personally saw him safely locked up, and then set out for home by the next train.

Not long after, a package arrived one day in Amarillo, and upon being opened, it was found to contain a handsome gold medal, contributed by a prominent jeweler and others of Fort Worth.

This decoration was engraved with Capt. McDonald's name and official title; and an accompanying letter stated that it was awarded as a token of appreciation of his efforts in bringing criminals to justice, and as a premium for his superior swiftness of foot.

It was during the Panhandle period that Charles A. Culberson—son of the Dave Culberson who nearly 30 years before had cleared the boy, Bill Jean McDonald, from a charge of treason—was attorney general for the state of Texas. Capt. Bill and Quanah, one day when he received notice from Culberson that the latter was anxious to locate the 100th meridian, preliminary to beginning a suit against the United States to test the claim made by Texas for Greer county—now a portion of Oklahoma. The attorney general invited Capt. Bill to accompany him as guide and bodyguard, knowing him to be familiar with the district and capable of taking care of such an expedition.

They left the railroad at Vernon, Willbarger county, proceeded in a buckboard to Doan's Store on the Rio Grande, and crossed over into Greer county, where it was a pleasant drive across the prairies and Capt. Bill, who fell in good practice, regulated the time by bringing down prairie-dogs, running rabbits, sailing hawks and the like, passing his six-shooter with one hand and the Winchester with the other, riding along as they were, without stopping. To Culberson, this performance was amazing enough.

"Captain," he said, "that beats anything I ever saw. Why, I believe you could throw a nickel up in the air and hit it before it touched the ground."

McDonald smiled in his quiet way.

"Do you think so?" he said. "Well, I reckon I might, but I wouldn't want to waste a nickel that way."

Capt. Bill then gave a few exhibitions of what he really could do in the way of shooting, and Culberson declared without hesitation that there was not such another marksman in the state of Texas. The attorney general was enjoying himself immensely.

They camped that night, and next morning were continuing their journey toward Mangum, the county seat of Greer, when they began to meet men and women on horseback, evidently getting out of that section of the country without much waste of time. Capt. Bill inquired the reason of this exodus and was told a cowboy had killed an Indian over on the North Fork of the Red, and that the Indians were getting on their war-paint, preparatory to making a raid—Comanches and Kiowas.

"General," said Capt. Bill, "I'll have to look into this thing. You can go on to Mangum with the team and I'll get me a horse and go over and take a hand in this trouble."

"Not at all," said Culberson. "You've undertaken to see me through this trip and I'm not going to let you desert, now, Indians or no Indians."

"But I've got to, general. This here's a pleasure trip, and that's business. These devils are goin' to start something over there, and it's my duty as Ranger to investigate it."

Culberson laughed.

"Now, captain," he said, "you know very well that all you want is to go over there where there's a chance to give a shooting exhibition. You've got tired of hawks and prairie-dogs and want to try your hand on Indians."

A new arrival just then furnished the information that the offending cowboy had been killed at Mangum, and that the Indians were likely to storm the jail. This settled the matter, for Ranger duty and inclination now lay as a rule are the savers' water than the spenders, and when the boy is laid by on his way to the dollar mark the saving is generally due to his economy.

Another man holds that it is the part of the ideal wife to keep herself neat and tidy. It is, but too many men throw the whole burden of the household drudgery upon a woman's shoulders, without once reflecting that a maid-of-all-work cannot keep her coiffure, her complexion, and her attire as immaculate as the boy of leisure, who may loiter as long as she likes before the mirror, and the toilet table in her boudoir. It is a source of unhappiness in many a home that the man makes disparaging comparisons between his foreworn and preoccupied wife and some airy fairy Lillian whose chief concern is whether her white shoes are spotless and her gloves quite clean.

Another man believes that the ideal wife is one who "does not harass the life and soul out of a man." Heckling or henecking at home is, beyond per adventure, the continual dropping that wears away a stone; but it is only fair that the man should ask himself a few searching questions before he blames his better half. Has he been kind or cross after the day's worries? Has he been thoughtful or negligent about the minor items that in life's appraisal make up the major portion of the inventory? The man who finds fault with his wife will sometimes find that "on his own head, in his own hands, the sin and the saving lies."

Sometimes hard fate in the guise of an angry parent prevents her, and then she gallantly keeps waiting.

Scenes of sheer shell-shock follow, and when he would like to become friendly, he follows her. Chaperons prove not impossible obstructions.

He follows her right up to her very door, and notes the address. Next day he comes again, and if the young lady approves of him—for she certainly saw him the day before—she is on the lookout.

SEIZING ONE HE CALLED TO THE OTHERS TO HALT

in the same direction. McDonald and Culberson drove as rapidly as possible toward Mangum, then about 50 miles away, changing horses once on the hard journey. The town was well-nigh deserted, as nearly everyone who could get a gun had gone to the scene of the killing. Capt. Bill therefore established himself as guard of the jail where the cowboy was confined, and waited results. Nothing or consequence happened. The country quieted down, Culberson and Capt. Bill presently returned to Quanah.

But a few days later when the attorney general had arrived in Austin, Capt. Bill received a package by express propad. On opening it he was surprised to find that it contained a "plug" hat of very fine quality. It was the first silk hat in the Panhandle, where the soft wide-brimmed cowboy Stetson predominated, and it took more courage to wear it than to face an assault with intent to kill.

But Capt. Bill was game. He was a "brother-in-law to the church," as he said—his wife being a member—and the following Sunday he put on the silk hat and accompanied her to meeting.

Their seat was up near the front, only a step from the pulpit—a good thing for the minister, otherwise nobody would have looked in his direction. As it was, all eyes were averted toward Capt. Bill and his hat. The congregation had seen him come in with it in his hand, and they could still observe the wonder, for it would not do to put so fine a piece of property on the floor, while he set it toppling on his lap would be to court disaster. It seemed necessary therefore to hold it in his hand, raised a little, and at a distance from his body, in order that by no chance movement the marvelous gloss of it should be marred. The people of Quanah who attended church that day were glad to be there. They are still glad. They do not remember the sermon they heard, but they do remember that hat. Even the minister who preached that hat, even the pulpit, was not entirely recovered from the bullet wounds received in the fight with Matthews two months before, and was bent and debilitated, but he did not falter. With Queen and Harwell he plunged in and waded the icy water, chin deep, to the other side. Twice more the bandits had crossed.

CAMPAIGN PLANS BEING MATURED

Republican Congressional Committee Getting in Readiness for Active Work.

ORATORS TO DEFEND TARIFF

Question is Bound to Be One of the Principal Issues in the Coming Elections—Democrats Determined to Keep It in the Front.

Washington—If the Republican congressional committee has its way, a defense of the tariff law will be made by the principal campaign orators during the two months prior to the election next November. The Republicans had hoped that the tariff was buried as an issue past resurrection for at least ten years, but members of their own party have refused to attend a funeral or even to admit that the issue is in any immediate danger.

Then the Democrats also have announced that they are going to pay their attention to the tariff, and by the use of frequent electrical oratorical currents, keep it not only alive, but with strength enough to dance constantly before the public until the November snows come.

It is extremely likely that President Taft will have some things to say about the tariff, maintaining a position of defense of his act in signing the bill. It is believed, however, that the president will pay most of his speaking attention to his legislative measures, and to his future program, for Mr. Taft, it is said, does not believe that the customs should by any means be made the main issue during the congressional campaign, even if the Democrats make good their threats.

Middle West May Not Want Speakers.

Most of the members of the Republican congressional committee are high tariff men, and so naturally it is to be expected that they will urge the strongest kind of a defense of the Payne-Aldrich schedules. It is understood that some of the old time stand pat Republicans will be sent into the middle west to make tariff speeches of the kind that were popular in the days when William McKinley was running for the presidency. This means that there will be a wide difference between the tone of the speeches made during the Taft campaign and those to be made during the congressional campaign of the coming summer and fall.

Second-Term Talk.

Evidences are accumulating that President Taft's Janus announcement to members of his college fraternity that he was inclined to think one term is enough, has led to some curious results. Some of the president's friends have told him that if he really intends not to be a candidate again it is with full power to check a good deal of the opposition to some of his legislative measures by making a direct statement that he will not again seek presidential office.

The president apparently has no present intention of making any such statement, because, of course, he does not know how the future may shape itself and how strong and insistent a demand there may be from the Republican party that he once more shall take on the duties of standard bearer. It is perfectly well known in Washington that Mr. Taft has not enjoyed greatly his first year's experience as president of the United States. The troubles that have come to him and the adverse criticisms that have been made concerning what some people think is lack of initiative, have worried him as much as one of his equable temperament can be worried, and it probably was because of the vexations of administrative life that he said what he did in indirect intimation that one term was pretty near enough for anybody.

From Selfish Standpoint.

Some of the "regular" Republicans say that if Mr. Taft does pronounce decidedly against a second term for himself the attacks are ambitious for presidential preferment, and so naturally they attack the sincerity of the present president in order to make capital for themselves by creating opposition to the administration of a man who it was supposed desired a second term. There are signs that even with a humorously worded expression of a lack of desire for a second term, the opposition to the legislation is subsiding. This, the friends of the president say, goes to show that the prophecy the attacks would cease altogether if Mr. Taft should declare himself out of the field was well based.

It must be said, however, that few hardened politicians can be found in Washington in either party to admit that there is any likelihood for a long time to come that Mr. Taft will come out with a footloose statement to the effect that he does not desire and will not take the nomination for a second term.

The friends of the president say that the Insurgent Republicans, not wishing to keep up the animosity within the party, will refrain from talking about the Payne tariff law, and will make their campaign on a basis of legislative progress in other directions, occasionally using a word, however, to the effect that under Democratic rule free trade will be a certainty, and that while the insurgents are tariff revisionists, they are very far removed from the condition of out and out believers in free trade.

Women Pearl Divers in Japan.

The pearl divers of Japan are the women. Along the coast of the bay of Ago and the bay of Gokusho the 13 and 14-year old girls, after they have finished their primary school work, go to sea and learn to dive. They are in the water and learn to swim almost from babyhood, and they spend most of their time in the water, except in the coldest season, from the end of December to the beginning of February. Even during this most inclement of seasons they sometimes dive for the pearls. They wear a special dress, white underwear, and the hair is twisted up into a hair knot. The eyes are protected by glasses to prevent the entrance of water. Tubs are suspended from their waists. When these vessels are filled the divers are raised to the surface and jump into the boats. They dive to a depth of from five to thirty fathoms without any special apparatus and retain their breath while remaining under water from one to three minutes. Their ages vary from 13 to 40 years, and between 25 to 35 they are at their prime.

Peculiar Position for Rest.

Edwin Hawley, who has bought more railroads than has any one else since the panic, and is sometimes called of the new Harriman, has a curious habit of repose in his office when the day's work is done. The few people who see him then see him sitting on the floor like a Turk or tailor fashion, with legs crossed, back against the wall and arms around both legs below the knees. Often he rests in this way for an hour or more chatting with friends, business associates and subordinates and denying himself to all callers.—New York Sun.

PLEASES SCHURMAN

Cornell President Sees Good in Big Philanthropy Scheme.

Believers Congress Should Grant Request for National Charter—Would Change Only One Small Detail.

Ithaca, N. Y.—In an address before the Council Congress on Friday night President Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell commanded the scheme for the Rockefeller foundation for which congress has been asked for a national charter. President Schurman devoted his entire speech of several thousand words to this subject and in summing up he said:

"I recognize that section No. 2 of the bill, which defines the object of the Rockefeller foundation, authorizes and empowers that foundation to do anything and everything which may promote and advance human civilization, that is to say, morals and religion, art and science, manners and social intercourse, and all that concerns the welfare of individuals and communities. This is a vast field for the exercise of philanthropy."

"But Mr. Rockefeller has conceived a vast scheme of philanthropy, for the benefit of his fellow citizens and mankind. His character, ability and organizing skill are adequate guarantees that he will carry out his scheme wisely and successfully, with inestimable benefit and blessing to mankind. It is in the interest of the nation that he be given a free hand in the exercise of his esteemed beneficence. So long as he is active or his influence remains it would be wise and safe to give the foundation the sort of organization he desires. Neither now nor hereafter does it seem necessary to limit the scope of his beneficence, which is coextensive with the efforts of mankind to attain a higher civilization."

"The only change I would desire to see in the proposed bill is the total or partial elimination of the method of selecting trustees by co-operation. The organization might well be left a close corporation, if Mr. Rockefeller so desires, for a generation. But after that time I am confident that it would insure both to the efficiency of the foundation and to the public welfare—to say nothing of the satisfaction of the sentiment of a democracy—if the majority of the trustees were appointed by the president of the United States, with the advice and consent of the senate, or selected by some other high abiding governmental agencies that may fairly be regarded as representing the people of the United States, whose welfare is the primary object of the immense and glorious benefaction."

CAMPAIGN PLANS BEING MATURED

Republican Congressional Committee Getting in Readiness for Active Work.

ORATORS TO DEFEND TARIFF

Question Is Bound to Be One of the Principal Issues in the Coming Elections—Democrats Determined to Keep It in the Front.

Washington.—If the Republican congressional committee has its way, a defense of the tariff law will be made by the principal campaign orators during the two months prior to the election next November. The Republicans had hoped that the tariff was buried as an issue past resurrection for at least ten years, but members of their own party have refused to attend a funeral or even to admit that the issue is in any immediate danger of death.

Then the Democrats also have announced that they are going to pay their attention to the tariff, and by the use of frequent electrical oratorical currents, keep it not only alive, but with strength enough to dance constantly before the public until the November snows come.

It is extremely likely that President Taft will have some things to say about the tariff, initiating a position of defense of his act in signing the bill. It is believed, however, that the president will pay most of his speaking attention to his legislative measures, and to his future program, for Mr. Taft, it is said, does not believe that the customs should by any means be made the main issue during the congressional campaign, even if the Democrats make good their threats. Middle West May Not Want Speakers.

Most of the members of the Republican congressional committee are high tariff men, and naturally it is to be expected that they will urge the strongest kind of a defense of the Payne-Aldrich schedules. It is understood that some of the old time standard Republicans will be sent into the middle west to make tariff speeches of the kind that were popular in the days when William McKinley was running for the presidency. This means that there will be a wide difference between the tone of the speeches made during the Taft campaign and those to be made during the congressional campaign of the coming summer and fall.

When the Taft-Bryan campaign was on, the Republicans spoke of the tariff in much the same spirit that they spoke of it during the days of the national convention. They said they were going to revise the tariff, and the general understanding was that they were going to revise it downward. Now the Democrats charge that there was no revision downward, or if there was any lowering tendency at all, it was too slight to be worthy of attention. Some of the Insurgent Republicans are in the same mood as the Democrats, and in the Insurgent districts it is probable that there will be very little high tariff talk. This means that the Republican congressional committee will find that the speakers which they apparently intend to provide will not be in demand in the Insurgent districts.

Tariff Worries Massachusetts. Representative McKinley of California, who must not be confused with Representative McKinley, chairman of the Republican congressional committee, although both are high protectionists, recently made a speech in the Chelsea (Mass.) district represented in congress by Ernest W. Roberts, a stanch Republican. The old Bay State is much exercised over tariff matters, and some of the Republicans there fear that they are not going to be re-elected. They find they can not repudiate their action on the Payne tariff law, and so they have made up their minds to defend the law and to try to bring the doubters back into the fold.

While the Republican congressional committee is getting ready to send out its best high tariff speakers, the Democratic congressional committee is preparing to send out its best anti-high tariff speakers. It is probably evident that the next campaign will be one in which the tariff will figure just as largely as an issue as it has figured any time in the past, except in the purely Insurgent districts. It may be that the Insurgent Republicans, not wishing to keep up the animosity within the party, will refrain from talking about the Payne tariff law, and will make their campaign on a basis of legislative progress in other directions, occasionally using a word, however, to the effect that under Democratic rule free trade will be a certainty, and that while the Insurgents are tariff revisionists, they are very far removed from the condition of out and out believers in free trade.

Seek New Leaders.

Both the Republican and Democratic members of the United States senate are considering the question of the leadership in the senate after the fourth of March next, when Nelson W. Aldrich, the majority chieftain, and Hernando D. Money, the minority chieftain, retire from the service.

It is generally acknowledged by members of both parties, and probably by the country, that in effectiveness of majority leadership the Republicans have had no man in years as resourceful and as tactful as the senator from Rhode Island has proved himself to be. Countless thousands of people found fault with Mr. Aldrich's affiliation, and with his works of accomplishment, but no one has ever said that he did not know how to hold his party together, and how to save the situation at crucial times after a manner in which from his point of view, the situation ought to be saved.

Williams Succeeds Money.

Senator Money of Mississippi will retire from the senate next March, to be succeeded by John Sharp Williams, who until a year and a half ago, was the leader of the minority in the house of representatives.

It is generally admitted that if Senator Joseph W. Bailey of Texas will be saved from a less stormy career in matters not connected with the senate, and if some of his colleagues did not differ widely from his views, he would be the logical leader of the Democrats in the senate. It can be taken for granted, however, that Mr. Bailey never will be chosen by the Democratic caucus as a party chief in the upper legislative hall.

If Senator Culverton regains his health and is able to reassume the duties of leadership, the Democratic will be an easy task to solve for without question the Texan will be given once more the honor of leadership. The belief is, however, that even with returning strength, Mr. Culverton will see the necessity of handing it over to a man who is more than a master of party leadership.

But Mr. Rockefeller has conceived a vast scheme of philanthropy, for his fellow citizens and mankind. His character, ability, and organizing skill are adequate guarantees that he will carry out his scheme wisely and successfully, with inestimable benefit and blessing to mankind. It is in the interest of the nation that he be given a free hand in the exercise of his colossal beneficence. So long as he is active or his influence remains, it would be wise and safe to give the foundation the sort of organization he desires. Whether now or hereafter does it seem necessary to limit the scope of his beneficence which is coextensive with the efforts of mankind to attain a higher civilization.

This means that there will be a wide difference between the tone of the speeches made during the Taft campaign and those to be made during the congressional campaign of the coming summer and fall.

When the Taft-Bryan campaign was on, the Republicans spoke of the tariff in much the same spirit that they spoke of it during the days of the national convention. They said they were going to revise the tariff, and the general understanding was that they were going to revise it downward. Now the Democrats charge that there was no revision downward, or if there was any lowering tendency at all, it was too slight to be worthy of attention. Some of the Insurgent Republicans are in the same mood as the Democrats, and in the Insurgent districts it is probable that there will be very little high tariff talk. This means that the Republican congressional committee will find that the speakers which they apparently intend to provide will not be in demand in the Insurgent districts.

Tariff Worries Massachusetts. Representative McKinley of California, who must not be confused with Representative McKinley, chairman of the Republican congressional committee, although both are high protectionists, recently made a speech in the Chelsea (Mass.) district represented in congress by Ernest W. Roberts, a stanch Republican. The old Bay State is much exercised over tariff matters, and some of the Republicans there fear that they are not going to be re-elected. They find they can not repudiate their action on the Payne tariff law, and so they have made up their minds to defend the law and to try to bring the doubters back into the fold.

Seek New Leaders.

Both the Republican and Democratic members of the United States senate are considering the question of the leadership in the senate after the fourth of March next, when Nelson W. Aldrich, the majority chieftain, and Hernando D. Money, the minority chieftain, retire from the service.

It is generally acknowledged by members of both parties, and probably by the country, that in effectiveness of majority leadership the Republicans

SARATOGA

Mr. Margray bought two fine milch cows in Grand Rapids last Tuesday but by the time he had walked thirteen miles in thin shoes to lead home one of the cows that refused to go behind the wagon, he thought he was paying about double for that cow. He says he walked off the milch from both the little toes of his feet and claims to have the toes to show as proof.

Sunday, May 1, John E. Koch had a very sick horse but at this writing the horse seems to be all right for complete recovery.

CASE AFTER CASE

Plenty More Like This in Grand Rapids. —Scores of Grand Rapids people can tell you about Don's Kidney Pills. Many a happy citizen makes a public statement of his experience. Here is a case of it. What better proof of what can be had than such endorsement?

Louis Young, 753 Twelfth St. N., Grand Rapids, Wis., says: "Don's Kidney Pills are the best remedy I ever used for kidney trouble. My kidneys were very much enlarged and my rest was greatly disturbed by a kidney complaint. The kidney secretions were highly colored, contained a heavy sediment and passed entirely too frequently. My back ached almost constantly and I had sharp, shooting pains across my loins. I finally read of Don's Kidney Pills and seeing that they were recommended highly, I procured a box and began the search for the benefit received from their use. I can recommend them to anyone suffering from kidney complaint."

Lay of the Kansas Hen

We have read of Maud on a summer day, Who raked the earth and sowed the hay; Who milked the cow with the crumpled horn; And wept over the blossoms of the spring, But of all the corn and the flowers of spring, That's the Kansas hen.

The Kansas hen begins to lay, And lays a golden egg, a golden egg;

The corn just crusts and flowers spring, If Maud is neeting a tail or a gown,

She doesn't heft her hay to town,

With a basket full of her fresh hen fruit;

If the milkmaid's human nature is strong out,

She'll work up eggs in a cracked pie,

And stuff him full of chicken trim,

And then she'll lay a golden egg,

Does she like the drugged lot of corn?

Not much. He simply robs the hen,

And leaves the rest.

He hangs around with the ciques and rings,

And talks of politics and things.

With a golden egg she sows,

But is saved from want by those same tows,

For, while her husband lingers there,

She toils and toils, and toils,

And gathers eggs and the eggs shell little,

Then she saves enough to stow the hen.

The greatest blessing of all to men,

Throw up your hats and cheer,

For the Kansas hen is the Kansas queen,

—Kansas City Times.

RESTORING A LOST EMPIRE.

The possible realization of the project for requeening the old empire of Nebuchadnezzar to civilization, a project which only yesterday was but a dream, is foreshadowed by the efforts of the Turkish government to reclaim 12,500,000 acres of waste and in Northern Mesopotamia through irrigation, says New York World. Given the success of the experiment, the ancient realm of Assyrian and Babylonian monarchs may then be re-fertilized and re-peopled with an industrious race and the world's old granary restored after centuries of desolation. Mesopotamia's greatness was due to a system of irrigation canals in connection with the Tigris and Euphrates. It was by their neglect that it declined and was transformed into a sandy plain, the haunt of nomad tribes. Within recent times the engineer and the archeologist have invaded it, the former plotting the route of the Bagdad railway which is to unite it with the Western world and the latter delving in the dust heap which have disclosed in turn the site of Nebuchadnezzar's palace, the hall in which Belshazzar gave his feast and the very site of babel. To reclaim it to cultivation will cost $200,000,000.

Mr. Durand, the director of the census, has been casting a preliminary glance over the field, and he makes a rough estimate that the enumeration this year will show a population of between 88,000,000 and 90,000,000. The director's estimate would seem to be conservative as it does not include any extraordinary growth. In fact, according to his total the ratio of increase would be smaller than in the preceding ten years. The census of 1900 gave a population of 76,303,337, gain of nearly 13,000,000 over 1890. A corresponding gain from 1900 to 1910 would send the figures considerably over the 90,000,000 mark. In fact, the World Almanac, taking the estimates of governors of states and territories, places the population for the United States at present at 94,649,810. There has been some remarkable development in some localities, and the final result of the census taking this year may furnish some surprises.

The feelings have not yet got together in New York, but it looks more and more as though they are likely to do so. President Madero has made peace proposals, and General Estrada, the leader of the insurgents, has replied. The offer is not accepted, but General Estrada suggests mediation, with the United States as the deciding power. Uncle Sam is not looking for any such mission, but if he can be instrumental in bringing about an honorable adjustment of the quarrel and in restoring peace to a distracted region, perhaps he will not object. And the steps taken looking to the withdrawal of the American naval forces in that quarter would seem to indicate that apprehensions of further serious trouble are no longer entertained.

HYDE GOES TO JAIL

JUDGE ORDERS DOCTOR INTO CUSTODY BECAUSE OF DAMAGING TESTIMONY.

PHYSICIAN HAS TRYING DAY

Evidence Is Adduced That He Bought Large Quantities of Poison and Procured Typhoid Germs From Kansas City Bacteriologist.

Kansas City, Mo.—Just before the adjournment of the criminal court of Jackson county on Wednesday, Judge Latshaw ordered Dr. Bennett Clark Hyde, charged with the poisoning of Col. Thomas J. Swope, and who has enjoyed his liberty ever since the indictment was returned against him by the grand jury, to be confined in the Kansas City jail and he was therefore locked up by the marshal.

The jury had lied out in session or when Judge Latshaw called the marshal before him and said:

In view of the testimony thus far given in this trial that the court is constrained to say that it amounts to a presumption of guilt that under the law deprives the defendant of the right to go on bond and he is hereby and for that reason remanded to the custody of the marshal.

Following this announcement Mrs. Hyde, who once collapsed during the day, under the weight of adverse testimony, was prostrated and her condition in such that physicians are in constant attendance.

Doctor Hyde underwent the hardest and most trying day of his whole life. It was brought out by the testimony of witnesses.

That Doctor Hyde had purchased both before and after the death of Col. Thomas and Charles Evans Swope, enough cyanide of potassium to have killed thousands of persons.

That Doctor Hyde specifically ordered this poison to be put up in the form of capsules.

In this size, form and general appearance there capsule of potassium cyanide were almost indistinguishable from the "digestive tablets" that were given to the Swopes.

That Doctor Hyde, previous to the death and the illness in the Swope mansion, had prepared from a leading bacteriologist of Kansas City large quantities of typhoid and diphtheria germs.

That the bacteriologist, having been suspicious that the cultures were not being used for a scientific purpose, had visited Hyde's office during the latter's absence in New York and had substituted some harmless germs for the typhoid and diphtheria germs.

That the nurses in the Swope home during the epidemic of typhoid, fearing sure that they were being used as the unwilling instruments of death, struck and refused to go on with their duties unless Doctor Hyde left their home.

And finally and probably the most important of all, that the autopsy on the body of Col. Thomas J. Swope proved conclusively to the eminent medical authorities who performed it that death was not due to natural causes.

RESTORING A LOST EMPIRE.

The possible realization of the project for re-opening the old empire of Nebuchadnezzar to civilization, a project which only yesterday was only a dream, is foreshadowed by the efforts of the Turkish government to reclaim 12,500,000 acres of waste land in Northern Mesopotamia through irrigation, says New York World. Given the success of the experiment, the ancient realm of Assyrian and Babylonian monarchs may then be re-fertilized and re-peopled with an industrious race and the world's old granary restored after centuries of desolation. Mesopotamia's greatness was due to a system of irrigation canals in connection with the Tigris and Euphrates. It was by their neglect that it declined and was transformed into a sandy plain, the haunt of nomad races. Within recent times the engineer and the archeologist have invaded it, the former plotting the route of the Baghdad railway which is to unite it with the Western world and the latter delving in the dust heap which have disclosed in turn the site of Nebuchadnezzar's palace, the hall in which Belshazzar gave his feast and the very site of Babylon.
